Certified Childcare Providers Deliver Quality Services for Everyone

To provide quality childcare services, love for children does not suffice. Childcare service is not just babysitting; it is a profession. As a profession, it requires knowledge how children grow and what their educational needs are. It also requires skills to communicate effectively with both children and their parents, passion for the profession and commitment to accompany children in their journey to a healthy adulthood.

This is exactly what the NGO Center for Women Development in North Mitrovicë/a is seeking to achieve through their new initiative of training and certifying educators and childcare providers.

“Educators and childcare providers help raise children in the safest and most appropriate way,” says Dijana Hasani, Executive Director of CWD. “Our program trains the childcare professionals in several areas, as pedagogues, nutritionists, and psychologists. They also receive training in first aid, self-defense, and speech therapy.”

The training program is accredited by the School for Childcare Providers in Belgrade, and the certificates are internationally recognized.

Sanja Lazarević from CWD says, “I am a mother. I remember how difficult it was to find someone to look after my child, as I had to go back to work. I am glad that now families in our area will have an additional option for childcare – either during day hours, or whenever they need such services.”

“Educators and childcare providers help raise children in the most appropriate way.” – Dijana Hasani, CWD.

USAID EMPOWER Private Sector’s grant to support the training is expected to create some 36 new jobs, mostly for women. As childcare service is not only a woman’s job, this activity goes beyond merely job creation.

The certified childcare providers will work with parents and families to ensure a high level of services that benefit everyone, in more ways than one, for example, free up busy schedules of women from unpaid care work thereby allowing them to be involved in paid work outside of their homes. This is another contribution to women’s economic empowerment and to a better economy.

Supporting the Success of Kosovo Companies

At the inauguration of the new production line of children’s shoes by Solid Shoe factory, Ambassador Delawie said ““By creating 55 new jobs to work this new production line, you will create opportunities for your employees and their families to build better lives – a fact of which you should be extremely proud. I encourage you to continue expanding in the right direction: new innovative products, new markets, and more jobs for everyone. The United States is proud to be your partner.”

New ICT Training Program for Youth Launched

A recent study by the Kosovo Information and Communication Technology Association indicated that the ICT professionals with certain skills are much in demand by both local and foreign companies, which is translated into new and better jobs for Kosovo’s youth, and signifies more economic growth. To help address the need, USAID partnered with the Kosovo Association of Information and Communication Technology (STIKK), and the Governments of Norway and Germany. In December, STIKK launched the new training program to be delivered in two rounds, each lasting 6 months that will equip youth with the skills currently in demand by employers. This training program acknowledges the increasing role of technology in changing and shaping the new reality of the labor market in Kosovo as anywhere else in the world, and about new skills and profiles required by the employers. The good news is that some 70 new jobs for young women and men in this sector will be created.
